

Queritius Turns 6: 6 Insights from Our Partners

“

For much of my career I believed that being a good lawyer was enough. The biggest shift in my transition to partner at Queritius has been realising that the role is no longer only about the hard letter of the law, but about people – trusting others, giving them room to lead, and building a culture where talented lawyers can do their best work for our clients.”

Alicja Zielińska-Eisen

“

I have learned how much small improvements - often seemingly insignificant - can matter when applied consistently over time. When a team embraces these incremental improvements, their impact multiplies. In my experience, it is these small, purposeful steps taken consistently that move both the team and the business forward far more often than any major overhaul.”

Dalibor Valinčić

“

It is rare in international law firms that you can be completely straightforward with your colleagues without running the risk of being misunderstood or of misleading anyone. Queritius is more than a law firm. It is a collective of soulmates.”

Sergiy Gryshko

“

Early in my career I often wondered how to be a good lawyer, and I believed fitting an imaginary mould was the way to succeed. Over time I learned that success comes from embracing and developing your own way of thinking, shaped by your unique experiences. Queritius has given me the confidence to trust that perspective and stand on my own, including the perspective I bring as a woman in this profession.”

Petra Pataki

“

Building a legal team from scratch together with my partners has challenged me in ways I never expected. Boutique law firm partners are lawyers, managers, salesmen and administrators to some extent, all the time. The intensity can be overwhelming, but it has pushed me to work smarter and harder than at any point in my time in BigLaw in the US or the UK.”

Dániel Dózsa

“

Having worked for 20 years in global law firms I thought I knew a lot about business. But most things I now know about the leadership, the values, the people, the risk or the reward, I have learned at Queritius.”

Wojciech Sadowski

Thank You For Being With Us!